

NOON EDITION

NOON EDITION

THE DAY BOOK

An Adless Daily Newspaper.

N. D. Cochran,
Editor and Publisher.
500 South Peoria St.

398

Tel. Monroe 353.
Automatic 51-422.
By Mail, 50 Cents a Month.

VOL. 3, NO. 115

Chicago, Thursday, Feb. 12, 1914

ONE CENT

THERE'S A GOOD REASON WHY TRUST PAPERS FIGHT THE TAX PROBE

State's Att'y Hoyne Discovers That the Inter-Ocean Hasn't Paid Its 1912 Taxes Yet—The Game Looks Like One To Throw the Veil Over the Wealthy High Mogul Taxdodgers.

Why some trust newspapers are fighting the proposed investigation into taxdodging by the grand jury on evidence submitted by State's Attorney Hoyne is shown in the discovery by the prosecutor that the Inter-Ocean hasn't paid its taxes for 1912.

But behind the personal interest that the Inter-Ocean must feel in stopping the tax probe looms up a darker game, a game to throw a veil over wealthy taxdodgers.

One of the best friends of the Inter-Ocean is Julius Rosenwald. Some of the reactionary, labor-hating editorials that come out in the Inter-Ocean appear as though they may have come from the pen of Julius.

And if Maxwell Edgar, secretary of the Illinois Tax Reform Association, is allowed to go before the grand jury in the coming investigation one of the men who might be hit hard is Julius Rosenwald.

The Inter-Ocean, since H. H. Kohl-saat took control, has been a veritable press sheet for Rosenwald and his "philanthrophes" and bunk civic reforms.

When the Illinois Senate Vice Commission investigated the condition of working girls of Chicago and held up the Sears-Roebuck slave-driving mill as a thing of horror to the people of Chicago, the Inter-Ocean began a campaign of calumny aimed at the head of the commission, Lieut.-Gov. Barratt O'Hara.